This method of ventilation, in connection with indirect or seinidirect radiators for warming, is quite successful and by slight modifications may be readily adapted for many small build Fig. 203.--Iron clamps for supportl 10. (J01.--Construction of ventilating shaft. ing stack. nigs. For residences this method may be employed in place of the ventilating shaft as previously mentioned. The movement of air in the vertical or main vent flues should not be less than 6 feet per second. With an arrangement of the nues as described above, if properly constructed, this velocity, or even a greater, should be easily obtained. Make the register openings of such sizes that the velocity (t (he air through them will not be more than one half that in the vertical duct, or in other words, not more than 3 feet per second. If this schedule is adhered to, no perceptible draughts will abound or be felt by the occupants of a room. When semidirect radiators are used for warming the entering air, the dampers may be adjusted to suit the state of the weather. With indirect radiation the registers should equal in size and open area those used for foul air. Definite results as to air volume and velocity may be obtained by properly proportioning the amount...
