Dept. of Labor, Employment and Training Administration, Office of Workforce Investment, Division of Workforce System Support, 2009 OCLC Number: (OCOlc)496115533 Subject: Employment forecasting -- United States. Excerpt: . . . What Do Community-Based Nonprofits Do Nonprofits are businesses driven by a mission responsive to a need, innovative idea, and or opportunity. Many are started by business leaders and are entrepreneurial in nature, pioneering change, organizing and managing talent and resources, and taking on the risk of starting something new in sometimes less than optimum conditions. These organizations are champions of harnessing community resources in the form of donations, volunteers, government grants, foundations, leaders, investors, and other stakeholders and aligning these resources with their mission. They are experienced in blending public and private funds to maintain their vision and capacity in times of economic stability and uncertainty. Some have developed products and services that are commercialized and distributed nationally and internationally. They are driven by a culture shared by staff and with a vision that leads to unity of purpose, high level of commitment, and positive results consistent with their mission. The community-based nonprofits involved with the WIB grantees ranged from those with expertise providing very specific services such as outreach, culturally-relevant training, and mentoring to those with little or no experience providing workforce activities or workforce activities connected to OSCCs. At the heart of their culture and mission are the lives of people in need of transformation. Connecting Community-Based Nonprofit Organizations to the Workforce System This item ships from La Vergne, TN. Paperback.
