In the evening, a select party of ladies and gentlemen assemble in the ball-room, and continue the dance till a late hour. Latterly all the ancient customs of this day have not been strictly observed. A delightful walk of somewhat less than a mile, through park-like grounds, on the south of the town, will bring the Stranger to the banks of the LOE POOL, The largest lake in this part of the kingdom, around which the scenery is very picturesque and beautiful. The Pool is supplied by the river Cober and other streams which flow down from the adjacent country, and is separated from the sea by a singular bar of shingle, through which the water is strained. During the winter season, it sometimes happens, that the Pool overflows, and inundates the lower part of the town of Helston, and stops some mills on its margin; in this case, a passage is cut through the bar in order to allow the excess of water to flow out freely into the sea. Connected with this necessity for opening the bar is a curious custom. The Mayor of Helston, on behalf of the distressed millers and his townspeople, makes application to the Lord of the Manor, at Penrose (on the lake) for leave to cut a channel through this shingle, which is granted on the presentation of two leather purses, containing three halfpence each, which are stored up with becoming reverence at Penrose, the seat of...
