Many of my pupils have asked that I would publish a small book containing such of my lectures as were connected with some of the more interesting experiences of my life. This volume is an attempt to comply, in part, with the wish so expressed. Most of these papers had their place in an institution known to all Oberlin students as the Thursday lccizqift j two are occasional addresses and for the privilege of reprinting two others in this collection, I am indebted to the courtesy of Messrs. Hough ton, Mif in and Company and the Bibliotheca Sacra Company. The obligation is specially acknowledged in the proper place. The lectures are not printed in the order in which they were delivered, but in the chronological order of the events described in them. In this way they become, in a measure and indirectly, auto biographical, which my pupils have expressed a desire that they should be. Some of these lectures were delivered as long ago as the early eighties, which will explain the occasional incompleteness in the account of men and events. It has been thought best to leave the lectures substantially as they were presented at the time. This book is dedicated to my pupils as a memorial of the.
