Necessity might rouse an avenger; some man of superior genius, not born in a seraglio, might put himself at the. head of an infuriate nation, atfd once more make Europe tremble at.the Turkish name. I Thfs is as probable a$ that the Porte will fell without resistance. The Turks are not effeminate; they are Hot unmanned, like the ancient Byzantines. Their priests promise paradise to those that fall in battle. The French Nation. JVIUST we then everywhere meet these harlequins, at fairs, and on the high-roads?--I have ever been averse from having much intercourse with them, and now they unfortunately occupy all avenues and roads of history so arrogantly and insolently, that the historian cannot proceed a step without meeting with them. And yet they blend so many amiable qualities with folly, that it is a difficult task to recount all the injury they have heaped upon us and posterity by their foolish proceedings. It is singular that a nation that hasnever, reflected, should give the world so much cause for serious reflection. The cause of the French, if we consider the serious part of it, seems to have been settled this long time; but there are still a great number of fools amongst them who continually begin the business anew. Errors and serious mistakes have been committed by either party, and this was not altogether unpardonable during the first revolutionary frenzy. The first effervescence of enthusiasm made many a grey-headed man childish, and many...
