Not illustrated. 1872 Excerpt: .great work Semiramis on which he has been at work so long in Rome, is at last finished. Two copies are immediately to be made in marble, one taken to London, the other to New York. During this spring he has also modelled another statue-- Electra at the tomb of Agamemnon: It is thus spoken of by Anne Brewster, writing from Rome to the Advertiser. Electra (as indeed all Story's works) seems what it is, the expression in clay of a long-dwelt-on thought, the development in tangible form of what his imagination had already created, just as words express the poem or the romance. --The art-world meets with a great loss in the death of Thomas Buchanan Read, poet and painter. His fame is so equal in both directions that one can hardly predict for which he will be longest remembered. Dying in middle life...
